To the Tutorial Advisor:
By signing this form, you are agreeing to supervise the student’s research project as described on Pages 1 and 2, and to provide the necessary materials, time, advice, etc. The semester workload described in this form should be equivalent to a typical course offered at Yale University (1.0 credit for PSYC 490/491/492/493 and 0.5 credits for PSYC 495), and it is the advisor’s responsibility to notify the DUS if any significant changes have to be made during the semester. You also agree that all student work must be turned in by the last day of reading week. Finally, you are also agreeing to provide the student with the mid-term feedback and final evaluations, and report a final grade to the DUS by the due date set by Yale College.

Some Guidelines for Tutorial Advisors
(Advisor’s COPY)

Here are some general guidelines for supervising Directed Research, Directed Reading, and Research Topics courses in the Department of Psychology:

1. Please note that by agreeing to serve as a tutorial advisor, you are agreeing to supervise the entire course for the student. This means that you will be providing guidelines for the students (e.g., preliminary reading lists, regular meetings to discuss ideas), imposing structure throughout the semester (e.g., setting up interim deadlines), and providing the final grade of the course. It is important that during the first two weeks of the semester, the student and the advisor reach an agreement about the basis of the evaluation as well as the expectations for the course. This tutorial form that the student will be submitting to the DUS is a good way of specifying such an agreement.

2. Keep in mind that the workload for this course must be equivalent to other courses offered at Yale. Typically, this translates to 8-12 hours per week of work for a full credit course (which could include performing research, running subjects, reading relevant material, attending lab meeting, etc.) and 4-6 hours per week of work for a half-credit course.

3. The DUS will ask you to provide some kind of midterm evaluation or feedback, in order to avoid any surprises at the end of the term. Students should also be made aware of this feedback and should be advised to withdraw from the course midterm if needed.

4. Students who wish to apply this tutorial toward their senior requirement will need to write a final paper with substantial writing (at least 20 pages for full credit PSYC 490/491/492/493 courses and at least 10 pages for a half credit PSYC 495 course). Some seniors may also wish to write a senior thesis, if they are seeking Distinction in the Major. For these students, their final senior thesis will be due to the Department in mid-late April.

5. As per Yale College rules, all work submitted for this course is due on the last day of Reading Week. You are not allowed to except any coursework after this time except with a Dean’s Excuse.

6. The final grade is due on the date set by Yale College. You will receive a memo from our registrar’s office at the end of the term about how to turn in the final grade.

7. If for any reasons you can no longer serve as the tutorial advisor, this change should be immediately notified to the DUS. If you have any concerns about the students, please keep the DUS informed about those matters as well.
